

Spousal Support in Mothers of Youth with an Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD)

Are you a married mother of a child or teen with an ASD?

At the Stony Brook University Social Competence & Treatment Lab, we are conducting a research study on how the various ways in which families work together may affect the mental health of mothers of youth with an ASD.

We are currently seeking mothers to volunteer to complete an online survey. This survey will take approximately 30 minutes.

This study might be right for you if...

- You are the biological mother of a child or teen aged 6-17 with an ASD
- You are not currently raising any children under the age of 6
- You are currently married and live at home with your spouse and your child
- Your child does not have any chronic medical illnesses

The potential benefits of the study are...

- The results may help us learn about how families work together and about the needs and mental health of mothers raising youth with an ASD!
- You will be entered into a raffle with a chance of winning a $20 Amazon.com gift card!

For more information, and to learn if you may qualify for this study, please visit www.lernerlab.com

And click on “Survey Studies” then “Spousal Support Study”

You may also email lernerlab@stonybrook.edu with any questions.

Thank you!

